Graphic Design

Anne-Marie Kottenstette

My graphic design work is fairly diverse. I have had quite a bit of experience for my age working with Colab: The LSC Marketing Shop as well as with several internships during my time at Colorado State University. Because of this, I have found that my portfolio consists of many different poster designs as well as a variety of projects that I have completed in my classroom experiences. I have found that I tend to be drawn more to typography and photographic influences within my work much more than an illustrative style.

WHAT HAS MOVEMBER DONE FOR MEN'S HEALTH?

Handlebar or pencil? Freestyle or la Mancha?

There are the athletic quads that men are facing at November approaches and the moustache becomes a symbol of men's health issues for the Movember charity project.

But with so many campaigns trying for one at a time, what difference is it really making? And is there a danger of handling things?

Ten years ago in a Melbourne pub, two young men were chatting about football trends over a beer when they decided the moustache they drew a moustache and persuaded 30 friends to grow a 'Mo' for charity - for ten dollars a go.

But four November in 2003 they raised nothing, but they persevered and ended up raising A$4,000 (£2,000) for the prostate Cancer Foundation of Australia the following year.

Now operating in 21 countries, Movember - as it became known - generated £27m in the UK last year and more than £50m around the globe.

Since that first pub rendezvous a total of £300m has been raised for research into prostate and testicular cancer.

In that time, hundreds of thousands of men have started cultivating a moustache and started talking about diseases that they are often too embarrassed to discuss in one quick to grow.

Mokey banter

Justin Coughlan was one of the original band of Melbourne Million and is now head of Movember here in Europe. He is still amazed by just how successful it has become and he claims it is all to do with the male urge to bond.

"Every guy wants to know what it's like to grow

In a competitive fundraising environment, where virtually every month of the year has been adopted by a cause or a charity, making their idea stand out from the crowd was a major challenge.

Standa HR, director of brand and strategic marketing at Cancer Research UK, says Movember has definitely achieved that.

"I really admire Movember - it is so different and so fresh. They pulled the team of men when there was nothing that like it."
"They found a way to appeal to men in a way that other campaigns just don't - with banter, and a sort of Mokey culture."

"This is no small feat since men are generally reluctant to go to their GP and have been known to leave clinics long long it has been since they had seen a doctor."

Independent research found that Movember has had no impact. Men were not talking about health issues specific to them, getting general check-ups and becoming more aware of the health risks they face.

Global research

But the real impact is being felt in prostate cancer and testicular cancer research, which has received a massive boost.

Prostate Cancer UK received £35m from Movember and puts half of that into research and the other half into community support services.

Jim Evans, head of research at the charity, says the funding has made a huge difference.

"There has been an investment in prostate cancer that in future cancer up could mean people become it a more complicated disease. We're

Grooming tips from the man with the longest moustache

By Rupa Jha and Bethan Jinkinson

Ram Singh Chauhan of India is the proud owner of the world's longest moustache, officially recorded by Guinness World Records at 4.29m (14ft) long. But what is the secret of his success? Here he offers five tips.

1. Start growing early - as soon as you can. Chauhan, now 54, started growing his moustache at 1970 - facial hair grows faster in one's youth, he says. "As you grow old your hormones grow weak, so the speed slows down."

And, of course, he has never cut it, apart from trimming around the lip area.

2. Eat Protein of the British-based Handlebar Club records this advice as a young man's facial hair is more durable than that of an elderly man. "As men age, hair goes white or starts to fall, so some more protein and to make them look off," says Parsons.

3. Groom it well. Chauhan spends an hour every day cleaning and combing his moustache. "I massage it and oil it regularly and I wash it every 10 days which takes a long time," he says. "But what helps me?" He uses a coconut based hair oil.

Parsons, who himself sports an elaborate braided moustache, recommends hair oil treatments as an excellent hair treatment after each. "You can also use products to improve hair that require a good wash to get it out. One where the oil is to be used in a regular basis, he says.

Red Landwood, vice-president of the World

Ram Singh Chauhan of India is the proud owner of the world's longest moustache, officially recorded by Guinness World Records at 4.29m (14ft) long. But what is the secret of his success? Here he offers five tips.

Beard and Moustache Association, says it's best for the moustache to avoid getting some kind of public. "Careful there is a lesson!"

4. Give your family no side. Chauhan's wife Asha says they used to fight over his moustache in the early years. "He used to take a long time to get ready to wash and she people used to stand in line," she says. She jokes that moustaches are like that. But later, as he started getting recognition for his long moustache, she started to like it and to respect his commitment. Now, she says, the moustache is like a part of the family and she doesn't let people in it.

Parsons' moustache, admits that his wife is not the greatest fan of his lip hairlines, but he has a good reason: "I don't see shaving a man with out a moustache is like drinking champagne without the bubbles."

5. Endure any discomfort. Chauhan says life is
